

Abstract

The invention relates to thermosensitive polymers which contain magnetic and/or metallic colloids and whose physical structure can be altered through magnetic induction or through supply of energy, as well as to processes for their production, and the use of such polymers for diagnostic and therapeutic purposes.